"MANCHESTER GUARDIAN" SAYS CHINESE COMMUNISTS WILL INVADE TIBET AND NEPAL

Manchester, 19 November — An article by a foreign correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, in discussing the effects of Chinese Communist activities in Tibet and Nepal, stresses the fact that a Communist-dominated Tibet will probably result in consternation in India.

The article states that Chinese Communists near the Tibetan borders of Chinghai have been training a well-disciplined body of Tibetan Communists, and that under present conditions Tibet will yield quickly to any pressure brought by Communist China. It further states that the Communists have even set the date of their invasion, which will take 3 months and might possibly occur by July 1960.

The article states that the Chinese Communists will move into Nepal once their gains in Tibet have been consolidated. It asserts that, although an invasion from the north is difficult, the Communists can nonetheless instigate unrest in Nepal with well-aimed propaganda directed at the Gurkhas.

The article adds that the territorial integrity of Nepal is of vital interest to India. It then states that India should, for her own welfare, proceed to eliminate any manifestations of internal strife in Nepal. As to the type of action to be employed, it states that that should be left up to India. It notes that the inevitability of the effects of a Communist invasion have brought Nepal and India together to discuss the situation.

In this connection, the article states that Nepal should modernize her defenses. It warns that Nepal's lack of weapons and outmoded system of government can be the principal targets against which the Communists will stage their invasion and that it is, therefore, essential for Nepal to develop into a more stable nation, politically and financially.

It concludes that Britain should not intervene during the Indo-Tibetan mutual defense discussions, but that she should stand ready to tender aid, which will be expected of her and will undoubtedly be welcomed by the two nations, when and if India decides to help Nepal vitalise her defenses.
